PROSECUTOR FINDS EVIDENCE OF FOOD PRICE MANIPULATION

Sensational Developments are Expected in Local Probe of Profiteering Among Retail Men—Leech Has Plan to Show What Merchants Sell on Closest Margin.

Evidence pointing to the existence of a combine among a number of local retail stores was in the hands of Prosecutor Lloyd S. Leech Saturday.

Definite plans for action on the matter are being shaped and some sensational developments are expected in connection with the probe.

In speaking of the matter, Saturday, the prosecutor said that his office is being flooded with anonymous communications. "All such letters, tending to throw any light on the subject should be signed," said the prosecutor, "if they are to be of any real value or assistance. Evidence, pointing to a combine among a number of local retail stores is in my hands and I expect some startling developments within the next few days."

Discussing the situation the prosecutor had some fault to find with the manner in which the most people do their buying. "They do not encourage competition and in place of asking the price of any commodity simply order it. If they would buy from the man who sells the cheapest, this fact alone would tend to curb high prices I have a plan in mind for bringing the merchants who sell on the closest margin before the public and will inaugurate it here as soon as possible. Until that time I would ask that people encourage competition by patronizing the man who sells on the closest margin."

Local grocers were inclined to discredit the prosecutor's theory of a combine but willingly admitted that contention among them and consequent agreement on various things at times made it appear possible.

They were highly indignant that they should be blamed and declare that the investigation will have to include the wholesale houses if it is to result in any measurable good.

Despite the probe, grocers were practically unanimous in their statement that food products have advanced within the past week. Sugar was quoted at an advance of 40 cents per hundred pounds. Vegetables of almost every kind have advanced a matter of two or three cents, and the market outlook is firm. Canned goods will be 20 per cent higher, grocers say.

SEEK CHANGE IN THE BANKING LAWS

Pressure of local bankers is being brot to bear on legislators in order to affect a change in the banking law regulating the amount of credit to be extended by the national banks

At the present national banks are allowed to extend a credit not to exceed 10 per cent of their resources to one party. They ask that this be increased to 25 per cent and cite for their reasons that merchants ask for increased credit and the state banks enjoy the privilege of extending 20 per cent.

RECEIVERSHIP IS THREATENED DICKERSON CO.

Payment Is Stopped On Creamery Co. Checks By Local Banks

CREDITORS CLOSE IN

Attempt Will Be Made To Straighten Affairs And Continue Business

At a meeting of the J. L. Dickerson Creamery & Produce Company Saturday evening at Attorney T. H. Wheeler's office, the advisability of making application for the appointment of a receiver for the concern was discussed. It was decided to make an effort to straighten out the financial difficulties in which the company has become involved. It is hoped that some plan will be evolved to take care of all pressing claims and place the business on a firm basis again Late Saturday night no legal steps had been taken but developments are expected the first of the week.

All day Saturday rumors were afloat thruout the city and county with reference to the financial difficulties of the Dickerson company. The matter was discussed on all sides Saturday evening. Bankers were naturally reticent upon the subject, altho it is no secret that payment has been refused on many of the company's checks during the past week.

The company transacted a wide business thruout Coshocton-co and sold large quantities of goods in the eastern markets. There was a general impression that the company was in excellent financial condition, following the report last January that a dividend of 35 per cent had been declared. It is said that severe reverses have been met with during the present year, however, and the company has been in stringent financial circumstances for some time During the past year the company maintained branches at Steubenville and Pittsbugh. The report has been afloat that the Pittsbrug branch became badly involved and that about $10,000 was lost there

During the past several months a large amount of additional stock was sold in various parts of Coshocton-co. The company carried an immense number of accounts, settling with the people from whom cream and other kinds of produce were purchased every week or two Therefore there were many people holding small claims against the company and many small checks were outstanding when the funds of the company at one of the local banks became exhausted and further payment of checks stopped.

Inquiries began to come in to The Tribune and Times-Age office from over the county with reference to the matter. All day Saturday it was rumored that an application would be filed in common pleas court for the appointment of a receiver.

The officers and directors of the company are: J S. Elliott, president, C. R. Bell, secretary; J. L. Dickerson, general manager; U G Ralston, S M Sawyer, C. D. Johnston and E. W. Jacobs.

Besides conducting a large milk and creamery business, the company manufactured ice cream, handled soft drinks and bot and sold produce in large quantities.

AT SEA

Yea, we go down to sea in ships—
But Hope remains behind,
And Love, with laughter on his lips,
And Peace, of passive mind;
While out across the deeps of night,
With lifted sails of prayer,
We voyage off in quest of light,
Nor find it anywhere.

O Thou who wroughtest earth and sea,
And keepest from our eyes
The shores of an eternity
In calms of Paradise,
Blow back upon our foolish quest
With all the driving rain
Of blinding tears and wild unrest,
And waft us home again.

COUNCILMAN HEINKE; BEHIND MOVEMENT, WIRES SEC'Y BAKER

Will Put Matter up to City Council Monday Night, Urging That Body to Lend Financial Support—Candidates Endorse Action, While Mayor Counsels Against it—Heinke is Determined.

Prospects were bright Saturday night for Coshocton to receive in the near future a carload of food from the army stores for distribution among the people at army cost prices. The opening gun on the high cost of living in the city was fired Saturday afternoon by Councilman E. W. Heinke, Republican candidate for mayor, who sent a telegram to the war department requesting that a carload of food be sent here.

He stated Saturday that he was willing to take personal charge of the car upon its arrival, guarantee payment and conduct the sale of the goods to the people of Coshocton at exact cost after figuring in the transportation charges. It is estimated that the food, if obtained, will be sold at prices from 20 to 60 per cent lower than prevailing market quotations.

Mr. Heinke will bring the matter to the attention of city council Monday night and says he has sufficient support pledged to guarantee passage of the necessary legislation. "I expect to get behind this project and put forth every effort to its successful conclusion," he said Saturday. "Had I been mayor of Coshocton we would have had a car of this cheap food before this," he added.

Wires Secretary Baker.

The telegram dispatched to Secretary of War Baker Saturday by Mr. Heinke read: "Wire information concerning method of proceedure necessary to secure one carload of non-perishable meats and vegetables for distribution by the municipal government of Coshocton, Ohio"

Similar steps have been taken by the Exchange Club, of Zanesville President Harry Mangold announced Friday evening that he had sent a telegram to the war department requesting an allotment of food for that city Councilman Heinke called Mr Mangold on the telephone Saturday to secure complete information with reference to the procedure necessary to secure the food from the government It is understood that the purchase would mean an outlay of $7,500 and that payment must be made to the government within ten days

Mayor H. L. Richardson when questioned Saturday concerning the purchase of a carload of foodstuffs indicated that he was not opposed to the purchase if sufficient interest is shown to guarantee the sale of the goods He indicated that he was not convinced that the situation in Coshocton is such as to warrant extraordinary means to supply the people with food. He called attention to the fact that the parcel post plan for distribution of government food is to be placed in operation August 15

With reference to the matter of requesting the government to send a carload of food here the mayor said "I don't believe the population of Coshocton warrants such a move and rather than make the purchase and incur the risk of waste I preferred not to take any official action in the matter" He indicated a willingness, however, to lend his individual co-operation to any practical plan that might be devised

An Emergency Measure.

C H Magruder, president of the city council, when asked whether he thot the city council would be willing to guarantee payment for a carload of government foodstuffs, said he saw nothing to prevent the council from taking such action, altho he doubted the wisdom of such a course He said that it would no doubt be possible to authorize payment for the car as an emergency measure

Councilman Heinke was heartily in favor of the project Saturday and is willing to put all his energy toward securing the car and seeing that the goods are sold in Coshocton at lowest possible prices He said he was willing to put the goods on sale near the depot or near the courtsquare upon their arrival and predicted that it would require only a short time to dispose of them He said he did not anticipate any difficulty in arranging for payment of the goods

Four carloads of canned meats and vegetables, including 40,000 pounds of bacon, were unloaded at Columbus Saturday and hurried to four municipal stores to be opened Monday noon. Beans, corn, tomatoes, corned beef, roast beef, and bacon are to be sold at prices materially lower than on the regular markets. An addition of one cent a can is to be made to the government's price on canned goods to cover shrinkage and cost of distribution. The Columbus shipment, valued at $50,000, has been personally guaranteed by Mayor Karb.

Cleveland, Akron and many other Ohio cities have secured large shipments of army foodstuffs. Appeals for supplies have been made by Dayton, Springfield, Marietta and many smaller places in Ohio. Several hundred carloads of vegetables are being sent to western cities, government officials said

Tish Approves Plan

"Fear that a car load of army food at cost price cannot be sold in Coshocton is groundless," said Democratic Councilman W S. Tish, a candidate for the proposed charter commission Saturday when he learned that Mayor Richardson was taking no steps toward securing a car load of the surplus army food for distribution here More than $7500 worth of food is sold in Coshocton in one week's business he commented.

Councilman Tish, who has consistently counseled municipal control of public utilities for many years, declared Saturday that he would do everything in his power to permit the Coshocton people to profit by the sale of army food below market prices.

"I shall take the matter up at Monday night's meeting of city council and make every effort to force the administration to act In the absence of the city solicitor I am not in a position to say whether it would be legal for council to appropriate an amount to guarantee payment for this car, but I am inclined to concur in the belief of President Magruder that it could be done

Would Sell Like Hot Cakes

In connection with the statement of the mayor that it would be impossible to sell $7500 worth of food in Coshocton within the limit fixed by the war department Mr Tish declared that two of Coshocton's groceries are handling over $2500 worth of goods every Saturday at market prices, which are from 20 to 60 per cent higher than the prices fixed for the army food There are any number of families in Coshocton that would invest up to perhaps $200 in non perishable foods at the saving offered, he declared, and purchasers would flock to the sale from miles around "Even tho there should be say a half a carload left when buying stopped" he added, "there are dozens of small communities that would be glad of the opportunity to take it off our hands without a cents loss to the city For my part I believe the city alone would snap up a car load of the cheap food in a few hours"

Caton's Statement.

"I stand heartily in favor of bringing a carload of government food to this city," said George Caton, Democratic candidate for the mayoralty nomination when interviewed concern-

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

If ever Chautauqua lecturers needed wisdom and vision and the courage of deep conviction to guide them as they talk to the people, they need it this year.

And if ever our people needed the guidance of trained and intelligent minds and the experience of years to keep them sane and wholesome it is in this year of grace, 1919.

We are not in need this year of discussions of Babylonian art and Egyptian astrology. We are living in times of tenseness and stress. We don't need to be told of the greatness of the past nor of the rosy promise of the future.

We have troubles of our own that cry out for solution NOW—TODAY! The burdens of a century are rolled up in one huge tidal wave of social and economic unrest. It is the HERE and the NOW that is of supreme interest and importance to millions of human beings at home and abroad.

Never have the Chautauquas had so great an opportunity as they have this year. And by the same token never have their responsibilities been so great.

Thinking men, fearless men, men with vision and the strength of mind and goodness of heart to sear their messages in burning words on the hearts of the people is the requirement of the hour.

There should be a record-breaking attendance at this year's Chautauqua. As dollars are measured now the price of admission is insignificant. There are sure to be some men on the program worth hearing, some men—or some individual speaker—who will say something worth the whole price of admission.

Our people can't afford not to come. Our farmers and business men and manual toilers need the intellectual and spiritual uplift. They need the time off. They need the change from the daily grind to grasp for a few days the viewpoint of speakers who have seen with their own eyes and who have spent weeks and months preparing their messages concerning the epic events of the past five years.

This is the one Chautauqua you can't afford to miss. The message you have been longing to hear has been prepared for you by some of the speakers. Don't miss that one.

GIVE THE CHARTER COMMISSIONERS A CHANCE.

The advocates of commission government should hesitate before committing themselves between now and next Tuesday. Fifteen names will appear on a special ballot and if those persons are elected they will be empowered from the people, they will at once proceed to draft a charter to be voted on at the general election next November.

We can only urge the voters here, as we did a year ago, to vote for these fifteen men. By voting for these men no citizen commits himself on the charter proposition. He simply gives his consent for these men to draw up a form of government later to be submitted to the voters for their approval or rejection.

If, at the November election, he does not approve of the plan the charter commissioners submit, he can vote it down. If a majority of the electors think as he does then the proposition will be democratically defeated and we will stand exactly where we do today. If a majority think the plan submitted is better than the existing form of government, then the change will be immediately effective and we will join the ever-increasing number of Ohio cities that are changing from municipal government under our old Municipal Code to what we believe to be a more modern and elastic system of local city government.

But manifestly, the thing to do next Tuesday is to give these fifteen men a chance. Let's see what they have. It is only fair to give them a chance. We gave the commissioners our permission to go ahead a year ago and the work of those men was only defeated by a few votes. We still believe a mistake was made in defeating the charter that commission drew up, but that is neither here nor there. The people rejected their work and our city affairs in the meantime have been managed along the old plan.

Many believe that if the election last year had been three or four days later the charter then up would have carried. That may or may not have been the case. The charter cause certainly made rapid strides the last ten days prior to the election and it is probably true that it would have carried if the voters had been given a few more days to deliberate.

But the charter advocates should not take things too easy. Because they made such progress last year is no sign the people are of the same mind now. The public is fair-minded, but prone to forget. We personally know of some men who were for it a year ago who are opposed now, not perhaps because of the inherent merits or demerits of the proposition, but because of alleged reasons that have no direct bearing on the proposition.

There are lots of just such voters. They allow their minds to be influenced by extraneous considerations. They get peeved at someone on the commission, they don't like the way the newspaper handles the news about it, or for some absurd reason as that. They are willing to sacrifice a principle they profess to believe in for some purely personal reason.

It is true there are not many people as narrow as that, but then the charter was defeated last spring by only a handful of votes and scores of its friends declare that if they had only known how close it was going to be they could have gone out individually and influenced enough votes on election day to have turned the tide.

We hope it will not be necessary to register any such vain regrets as that next Wednesday. Any man, whether he be for or against the kind of a charter that was voted on last spring can at least be liberal minded enough to vote affirmatively Tuesday. That will only empower these fifteen men whose names appear on the ballot, to draw up a charter. We can pay our respects to what they give us at the coming November election.

The names of the men to whom will be entrusted the drafting of a charter will appear on a special ballot at Tuesday's primary. Don't throw this ballot away. Vote on it one way or the other. We believe the fair thing to do would be to vote yes and give these men a chance to prepare for us a better form of city government than we have now. If they fail we can kill their proposition next November. But men receiving an affirmative vote they may feel encouraged from the people, they will at once proceed to draft a charter to be voted on at the general election next November.

THE PEACEMAKER

By GENEVIEVE KELLEY.

"There, take your ring and never speak to me again," flared pretty Claire Traynor, as she angrily handed Dick Grant his diamond.

"Very well," asserted Dick, "you can repent at your leisure."

"I'll never repent, Dick Grant, and you know right well it's all your fault. You promised to take me to the club dance last Thursday, and you never even showed up."

"But, Claire, please let me explain," began Dick.

"Don't you 'but Claire' me," she retorted, "it's very funny Bob saw you riding down Elm street Thursday evening." After which statement she left the room, leaving a very crestfallen young man behind.

Dick promptly took his hat and made for the door, not wishing to be met by any of the family, who would probably question him about his hasty departure, but he had forgotten that Bob, Claire's ten-year-old brother, was on vacation.

"Hello, Dick," shouted Bob, just as the former was darting out the front door, "that was some quarrel you two had, wasn't it? Gee, sister has a temper almost as red hot as her hair!"

"Say, Dick," continued Bob, "do you remember the Sunday night you pulled me out from under the parlor sofa? I never told ma what you said to sis that night, but still I haven't forgotten it. I suppose I could forget it, though, if I saw a real good show."

"Sure," agreed Dick, anxious to depart, and taking the hint, handed Bob a piece of silver, "and you might forget that Sunday night."

"You bet," responded Bob, who had already forgotten it.

Claire was very pale when she appeared at the breakfast table the next morning, and she was just pushing away her untouched grapefruit when Bob announced, "Dick Grant's joined the navy, an' he's goin' tomorrow."

"Yup," answered Bob, on being questioned, "he passed the examination Thursday night, an' tried to tell you, sis, but you wouldn't let him get a word in edgeways."

"What," gasped Claire, seeming not to comprehend.

"Oh I said it looked like rain," spurted out Bob. "Why don't you pay attention to me?"

But his remarks were lost on Claire, who had fled to the privacy of her room.

Weeks of torture and suspense followed for Claire, and no one knew what she suffered.

"Hey, Sis, will you come canoeing with me this afternoon. I want to get some water lilies?" was Bob's greeting a short time later.

After obtaining her consent a keen observer would have seen Bob cautiously emerge from the boathouse with a saw and proceed to the water front, where he spent a half-hour in accomplishing some secret task.

Another half hour found him down at the Grant domicile engaged in deep conversation with Dick, who had been granted a furlough.

"Of course," agreed Dick, who found time hanging heavily on his hands "I'll be more than glad to help you paint your canoe, and I'll be there about 3."

It seemed to Bob he had never spent such a long afternoon, but it was just half past 2 when Claire appeared.

It was only a matter of a few minutes' walk before they reached the pier, and were soon paddling toward the center of the lily pad.

They had spent about 20 minutes picking water lilies when Dick appeared, though only Bob noticed him.

Seeing that the time for his act was approaching, Bob stooped (by way of fixing his shoe lace) and attended to some mysterious business in the bow of the boat, all unobserved by Claire.

"Goodness, Bob," exclaimed Claire, "my feet are getting all wet. What is the matter?"

"I'll see," offered Bob and after a short examination, he announced, "there's a hole in the canoe but maybe we can stick it out till someone comes along. By Jove, we're lucky, Sis, here's somebody now."

"Hi, Dick," shouted Bob, "we're sinking fast. Better hurry."

With a few even strokes Dick was at the side of the disabled canoe, helping Bob into his own.

"Ain't you goin' to save Sis?" demanded the impossible Bob. Dick threw him a look and asked, "may I escort you, Claire, to Miss Traynor?"

"It was not by a cold "no thank you."

"Very well; we may as well make for shore, Bob."

"All right," agreed Bob beginning to feel as if his plot was not just right some place.

Claire sat very still, thinking that Dick would come after her, but he was landing Bob on the nearby shore. Seeing her own boat rapidly filling with water and Dick making no attempt of returning, she called out in a frightened voice "please save me, Dick."

It was the very cry that Dick was waiting for, and he reached her side in double-quick time.

Not a word passed between the two during the transfer.

Upon reaching the pier, Claire prepared to leave, but she was stopped by a "won't you please let me explain, Claire" from Dick, and her answer was a faint "yes" from the muffled region of Dick's left shoulder.

JUDGE ORDERS SALE OF FOOD

COLUMBUS, Aug. 9.—Judge Robert P. Duncan, in common pleas court today ordered Receiver C. C. Chamberlain to place on sale immediately the 151,651 pounds of pork seized Wednesday from the Columbus Packing Co.

Judge Duncan's decision was the first of its kind known in legal history. And it was the first time in the history of Ohio that the Smith cold storage act has been used to afford lower food prices to the consumer. Attorneys for the packers and the creamery company served notice that they would appeal the decision. County Prosecutors Schlesinger and Chamberlain said, from the court's action, that they planned to offer pork to Columbus consumers next Monday.

"I trust this will serve as a warning to dealers against food hoarding," said Judge Duncan, in rendering his decision.

Judge Duncan, in his history making decision brot out three important points in answer to arguments of the attorney for the packing company. They were

First Section 1153-13 of the cold storage act is not a health measure but a measure to prevent hoarding of food in restriction of trade or to furnish prices.

Second. Action of this court in taking charge of this meat is not confiscation. It's simply taking charge of foodstuffs which the owner by his voluntary action did not in time sell.

Three. The owner can't sell the pork. The court has authority to sell it and it should be sold now before it is too late, as it will have to be sold eventually."

FARMERS URGE REPEAL OF THE PRICE ON WHEAT

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Repeal of the $2.26 wheat guarantee and abolition of the United States Grain Corporation were urged by farmer's representatives who appeared before the senate agriculture commission today.

Members of the committee agreed to join with the farmers representatives in putting the case before the public.

Restrictions on grain prices are "robbing the farmers of a billion dollars" T. C. Aleson, of the National Grain told the commission. We are opposed to price fixing of any kind, he declared. "If congress would remove all limitations on prices and wipe out restrictions on imports and exports, the price of wheat would be at least $4 to $5."

He said however, that the farmers would not go into bankruptcy this year on the $2.26 price, altho they are actually receiving only an average of $1.50 at country points.

"Isn't the $2.26 price purely arbitrary and actually lower than the laws of supply and demand would make it?" Senator Gronna, North Dakota, chairman, asked.

"Absolutely," replied Akeson, "and we are willing to have the guarantee taken off and risk it."

Senators criticized the grain grading regulations unfair to farmers by compelling them to sell grain as "inferior" which millers ground into "high grade" flour.

"The discount for low grade grain is so great that it is ridiculous," Gronna said.

"Some wheat is selling for as low as $1.13 a bushel but I haven't seen any $1.13 flour."

All enjoyed the occasion save one star which turned to gold. Miss Randall, of Buffalo, N. Y., sang a solo while Miss Rhoads, of St. Louis, Mo., furnished a violin selection. By AGNES G. BROGAN

Jinny stood at the busy street corner and arranged her small stock of flowers. Jinny's father had brought them, all fresh and dewy, from the little greenhouse which was his pride and care. But Jinny on her street corner was more successful in sales than the crippled father in his sweet smelling shop, and the little southern girl's smile of unwavering recognition, her unselfish interest in her customers, may have been accountable for her success.

"Your mother is not with you today," Jinny would say to a woman who had stopped at the stand with an elderly woman upon a former occasion. "I hope she is well," and Jinny would add to the purchase a "memory flower" for the absent mother.

At home, in her room behind the shop, she wondered much concerning the lives of these customers, who were in fancy also her "friends." The one who aroused her greatest interest was the opera singer. Jinny could hardly believe her eyes when he stopped upon his way to the waiting taxi and claimed a boutonniere from her stand. Awe was in Jinny's eyes and her fingers trembled as she handed to him the flower.

Jinny's father told her that she kept the sunshine of the South still in her heart. "But if that sunshine warms nobody?" said Jinny, "of what use is it there?" So she was always looking about for ways to cheer. And, strangely enough, it was the opera singer himself who appeared to be most in need of cheering.

There was unmistakable sadness in his eyes as he lingered each day looking at her violets. And after the second generously paid purchase Jinny's face flushed rose-color as she pressed upon him a dainty boutonniere. "Please," she begged, "do not pay. It is my poor tribute to a great singer."

And the tenor, laughing at the genuineness of the compliment, had left upon the flower stand, two tickets to his evening concert. Jinny hurried home that night in a glow of anticipation.

"You and I," she said to the father, "will go." And they had gone.

And the girl as she sat in the concert hall heard a murmured conversation.

"Have you heard?" asked the woman next to her, "of this singer's unfortunate marriage? He married a girl down South it seems, long ago. Against his wishes and the wishes of her family she insisted upon coming to New York to continue her artistic career. If she persisted, they warned her, she need hope for no welcome home again. But the girl got ready, and obstinately came—no one knew where. After a year of silence and absence upon her part it is said that her husband relented and came in unavailing search of his runaway wife.

"Anyway," interrupted the listener, "it's an appealing story to gain interest for a much-advertised singer."

"If you please," asked Jinny next day of the singer, and blushed at her boldness, "will you give me two more tickets for tomorrow night's concert. I would like to come and bring a friend."

The man stared surprised for an instant, then laughed and tossed two tickets upon the flower stand

"Liked it, did you?" he asked.

"So much!" said Jinny. Bravely she made her request. "There was a song that my mother used to sing: 'Just a-wearying for you'—and I wondered—" All Jinny's appeal was in her eyes

"If I'd sing it?" The tenor fastened his boutonniere. "By request," he added laughingly.

"I will," he promised impulsively.

Jinny watched feverishly for a woman's shabby figure as she waited for her father to come and close up her stock for the day. Homeward hurried autos and people everywhere, the tenor's taxi would soon bring the singer to his hotel near by—and there in the doorway at last, lingered fearfully, that small, dark-eyed woman.

"Good evening," said Jinny. The girl came slowly forward.

"I was rather rude in refusing your gift yesterday" she drawled softly.

"Madame!" breathed Jinny, her soul in the effort, "if you would be kind enough but to go with me to the entrance, later, when the concert is well on its way—"

"Why—I will go," the woman agreed.

With a kindly air she led the hesitating flower girl through the brilliant entrance and on to the rear of the great hall—then turned to leave her there—when—she paused uncertainly, trembling before the tones of a silvery voice, "Wearyin' an' wonderin' when you'll be comin' home again," sang the voice—"Just-a-wearyin'—for you."

Jinny waited until her companion arose hastily to join the departing throng.

"I didn't realize," she said confusedly, "that I was staring."

Deliberately Jinny blocked the way

"Please," she begged, "stay a little longer, he meant that song for you, and soon he'll be coming—"

But the singer was already there.

"Katharine," he said huskily, and put forth his hand.

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

If ever Chautauqua lecturers needed wisdom and vision and the courage of deep conviction to guide them as they talk to the people, they need it this year.

And if ever our people needed the guidance of trained and intelligent minds and the experience of years to keep them sane and wholesome it is in this year of grace, 1919.

We are not in need this year of discussions of Babylonian art and Egyptian astrology. We are living in times of tenseness and stress. We don't need to be told of the greatness of the past nor of the rosy promise of the future.

We have troubles of our own that cry out for solution NOW—TODAY! The burdens of a century are rolled up in one huge tidal wave of social and economic unrest. It is the HERE and the NOW that is of supreme interest and importance to millions of human beings at home and abroad.

Never have the Chautauquas had so great an opportunity as they have this year. And by the same token never have their responsibilities been so great.

Thinking men, fearless men, men with vision and the strength of mind and goodness of heart to sear their messages in burning words on the hearts of the people is the requirement of the hour.

There should be a record-breaking attendance at this year's Chautauqua. As dollars are measured now the price of admission is insignificant. There are sure to be some men on the program worth hearing. some men—or some individual speaker—who will say something worth the whole price of admission.

Our people can't afford not to come. Our farmers and business men and manual toilers need the intellectual and spiritual uplift. They need the time off. They need the change from the daily grind to grasp for a few days the viewpoint of speakers who have seen with their own eyes and who have spent weeks and months preparing their messages concerning the epic events of the past five years.

This is the one Chautauqua you can't afford to miss. The message you have been longing to hear has been prepared for you by some of the speakers. Don't miss that one.

GIVE THE CHARTER COMMISSIONERS A CHANCE.

The advocates of commission government should hesitate themselves between now and next Tuesday. Fifteen names will appear on a special ballot and if these men receive an affirmative vote from the people, they will at once proceed to draft a charter to be voted on at the general election next November.

We can only urge the voters here, as we did a year ago, to vote for these fifteen men. By voting for these men no citizen commits himself on the charter proposition. He simply gives his consent for these men to draw up a form of government later to be submitted to the voters for their approval or rejection.

If, at the November election, he does not approve of the plan the charter commissioners submit, he can vote it down. If a majority of the electors think as he does then the proposition will be democratically defeated and we will stand exactly where we do today. If a majority think the plan submitted is better than the existing form of government, then the change will be immediately effective and we will join the ever-increasing number of Ohio cities that are changing from municipal government under our old Municipal Code to what we believe to be a more modern and elastic system of local city government.

But manifestly, the thing to do next Tuesday is to give these fifteen men a chance. Let's see what they have. It is only fair to give them a chance. We gave the commissioners our permission to go ahead a year ago and the work of those men was only defeated by a few votes. We still believe a mistake was made in defeating the charter that commission drew up, but that is neither here nor there. The people rejected their work and our city affairs in the meantime have been managed along the old plan.

Many believe that if the election last year had been three or four days later the charter then up would have carried. That may or may not have been the case. The charter cause certainly made rapid strides the last ten days prior to the election and it is probably true that it would have carried if the voters had been given a few more days to deliberate.

But the charter advocates should not take things too easy. Because they made such progress last year is no sign the people are of the same mind now. The public is fair-minded, but prone to forget. We personally know of some men who were for it a year ago who are opposed now, not perhaps because of the inherent merits or demerits of the proposition, but because of alleged reasons that have no direct bearing on the proposition.

There are lots of just such voters. They allow their minds to be influenced by extraneous considerations. They get peeved at someone on the commission, they don't like the way the newspaper handles the news about it, or for some absurd reason as that. They are willing to sacrifice a principle they profess to believe in for some purely personal reason.

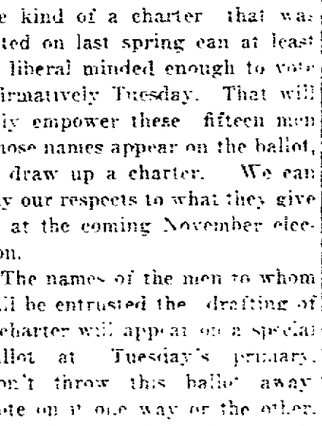

It is true there are not many people as narrow as that, but then the charter was defeated last spring by only a handful of votes and scores of its friends declare that if they had only known how close it was going to be they could have gone out individually and influenced enough votes on election day to have turned the tide.

We hope it will not be necessary to register any such vain regrets as that next Wednesday. Any man, whether he be for or against the kind of a charter that was voted on last spring can at least be liberal minded enough to vote affirmatively Tuesday. That will only empower these fifteen men whose names appear on the ballot, to draw up a charter. We can pay our respects to what they give us at the coming November election.

The names of the men to whom will be entrusted the drafting of a charter will appear on a special ballot at Tuesday's primary. Don't throw this ballot away. Vote on it one way or the other. We believe the fair thing to do would be to vote yes and give those men a chance to prepare for us a better form of city government than we have now.

If they fail we can kill their proposition next November. But they can't even fail unless we permit them to do this work for us. Vote yes on this special election

THE PEACEMAKER

By GENEVIEVE KELLEY.

"There, take your ring and never speak to me again," flared pretty Claire Traynor, as she angrily handed Dick Grant his diamond.

"Very well," asserted Dick, "you can repent at your leisure."

"I'll never repent, Dick Grant, and you know right well it's all your fault. You promised to take me to the club dance last Thursday, and you never even showed up."

"But, Claire, please let me explain," began Dick.

"Don't you 'but Claire' me," she retorted, "it's very funny Bob saw you riding down Elm street Thursday evening." After which statement she left the room, leaving a very crest fallen young man behind.

Dick promptly took his hat and made for the door, not wishing to be met by any of the family, who would probably question him about his hasty departure, but he had forgotten that Bob, Claire's ten-year-old brother, was on vacation.

"Hello, Dick," shouted Bob, just as the former was darting out the front door, "that was some quarrel you two had, wasn't it? Gee, sister has a temper almost as red hot as her hair!"

"Say, Dick," continued Bob, "do you remember the Sunday night you pulled me out from under the parlor sofa? I never told ma what you said to sis that night, but still I haven't forgotten it. I suppose I could forget it, though, if I saw a real good show."

"Sure," agreed Dick, anxious to depart, and taking the hint, handed Bob a piece of silver, "and you might forget that Sunday night."

"You bet," responded Bob, who had already forgotten it.

Claire was very pale when she appeared at the breakfast table the next morning, and she was just pushing away her untouched grapefruit when Bob announced, "Dick Grant's joined the navy, an' he's goin' tomorrow."

"Yup," answered Bob, on being questioned, "he passed the examination Thursday night, an' tried to tell you, sis, but you wouldn't let him get a word in edgeways."

"What," gasped Claire, seeming not to comprehend.

"Oh I said it looked like rain," snarled out Bob. "Why don't you pay attention to me?"

But his remarks were lost on Claire, who had fled to the privacy of her room.

Weeks of torture and suspense followed for Claire, and no one knew what she suffered.

"Hey, Sis, will you come canoeing with me this afternoon, I want to get some water lilies?" was Bob's greeting a short time later.

After obtaining her consent a keen observer would have seen Bob cautiously emerge from the boathouse with a saw and proceed to the water front, where he spent a half-hour in accomplishing some secret task.

Another half hour found him down at the Grant domicile engaged in deep conversation with Dick, who had been granted a furlough.

"Of course," agreed Dick, who found time hanging heavily on his hands "I'll be more than glad to help you paint your canoe, and I'll be there about 3."

It seemed to Bob he had never spent such a long afternoon, but it was just half past 2 when Claire appeared.

It was only a matter of a few minutes' walk before they reached the pier, and were soon paddling toward the center of the lily pad.

They had spent about 20 minutes pickling water lilies when Dick appeared, though only Bob noticed him.

Seeing that the time for his act was approaching, Bob stooped (by way of fixing his shoe lace) and attended to some mysterious business in the bottom of the boat, all unobserved by Claire.

"Goodness Bob," exclaimed Claire, "my feet are getting all wet. What is the matter?"

"Oh, see," offered Bob and after a short examination he announced, "there's a hole in the canoe, but maybe we can stick it out till someone comes along. By Jove we're lucky, Sis; here's somebody now."

With a few even strokes Dick was at the side of the disabled canoe helping Bob into his own.

"Aren't you going to save Sis?" demanded the impossible Bob. Dick threw him a look and asked, "may I assist you Claire Miss Traynor?" "She was met by a cold "no thank you."

"Very well; we may as well make for shore, Bob."

Claire sat very still, thinking that Dick would come after her, but he was landing Bob on the nearby shore. Seeing her own boat rapidly filling with water and Dick making no attempt of returning she called out in a frightened voice, "please save me, Dick."

It was the very cry that Dick was waiting for and he reached her side in double-quick time.

Upon reaching the pier, Claire prepared to leave, but she was stopped by a "won't you please let me explain, Claire," from Dick, and her answer was a faint "yes" from the muffled region of Dick's left shoulder.

JUDGE ORDERS SALE OF FOOD

COLUMBUS, Aug. 9.—Judge Robert P. Duncan, in common pleas court today ordered Receiver C. C. Chamberlain to place on sale immediately the 151,651 pounds of pork seized Wednesday from the Columbus Packing Co.

Judge Duncan's decision was the first of its kind known in legal history. And it was the first time in the history of Ohio that the Smith cold storage act has been used to afford lower food prices to the consumer. Attorneys for the packers and the creamery company served notice that they would appeal the decision. County Prosecutors Schlesinger and Chamberlain said, from the court's action, that they planned to offer pork to Columbus consumers next Monday.

"I trust this will serve as a warning to dealers against food hoarding," said Judge Duncan, in rendering his decision.

Judge Duncan, in his history making decision brot out three important points in answer to arguments of the attorney for the packing company. They were:

First. Section 1153-13 of the cold storage act is not a health measure but a measure to prevent hoarding of food in restriction of trade or to furnish prices.

Second. Action of this court in taking charge of this meat is not confiscation. It's simply taking charge of foodstuffs which the owner by his voluntary action did not in time sell.

Three. The owner can't sell the pork. The court has authority to sell it and it should be sold now before it is too late, as it will have to be sold eventually."

FARMERS URGE REPEAL OF THE PRICE ON WHEAT

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Repeal of the $2.26 wheat guarantee and abolition of the United States Grain Corporation were urged by farmer's representatives who appeared before the senate agriculture commission today.

Members of the committee agreed to join with the farmers representatives in putting the case before the public.

Restrictions on grain prices are "robbing the farmers of a billion dollars" T. C. Aleson ,of the National Grain told the commission. We are opposed to price fixing of any kind, he declared. "If congress would remove all limitations on prices and wipe out restrictions on imports and exports, the price of wheat would be at least $4 to $5."

He said however, that the farmers would not go into bankruptcy this year on the $2.26 price ,altho they are actually receiving only an average of $1.50 at country points.

"Isn't the $2.26 price purely arbitrary and actually lower than the laws of supply and demand would make it?" Senator Gronna, North Dakota, chairman, asked.

"Absolutely," replied Akeson, "and we are willing to have the guarantee taken off and risk it."

Senators criticized the grain grading regulations unfair to farmers by compelling them to sell grain as "inferior" which millers ground into "high grade" flour.

"The discount for low grade grain is so great that it is ridiculous," Gronna said.

"Some wheat is selling for as low as $1.13 a bushel but I haven't seen any $1.13 flour."

Jinny stood at the busy street corner and arranged her small stock of flowers. Jinny's father had brought them, all fresh and dewy, from the little greenhouse which was his pride and care. But Jinny on her street corner was more successful in sales than the crippled father in his sweet smelling shop, and the little southern girl's smile of unwavering recognition, her unselfish interest in her customers, may have been accountable for her success.

"Your mother is not with you today," Jinny would say to a woman who had stopped at the stand with an elderly woman upon a former occasion. "I hope she is well," and Jinny would add to the purchase a "memory flower" for the absent mother.

At home, in her room behind the shop, she wondered much concerning the lives of these customers who were in fancy also her "friends." The one who aroused her greatest interest was the opera singer. Jinny could hardly believe her eyes when he stopped upon his way to the waiting taxi and claimed a boutonniere from her stand. Awe was in Jinny's eyes and her fingers trembled as she handed to him the flower.

Jinny's father told her that she kept the sunshine of the South still in her heart. "But if that sunshine warms nobody?" said Jinny, "of what use is it there?" So she was always looking about for ways to cheer. And, strangely enough, it was the opera singer himself who appeared to be most in need—of cheering.

There was unmistakable sadness in his eyes as he lingered each day looking at her violets. And after the second generously paid purchase Jinny's face flushed rose-color as she pressed upon him a dainty boutonniere. "Please," she begged, "do not pay. It is my poor tribute to a great singer."

And the tenor, laughing at the genuineness of the compliment, had left upon the flower stand, two tickets to his evening concert. Jinny hurried home that night in a glow of anticipation.

"You and I," she said to the father, "will go." And they had gone.

And the girl as she sat in the concert hall heard a murmured conversation.

"Have you heard?" asked the woman next to her, "of this singer's unfortunate marriage? He married a girl down South it seems, long ago. Against his wishes and the wishes of her family she insisted upon coming to New York to continue her artistic career. If she persisted, they warned her, she need hope for no welcome home again. But the girl got ready, and obstinately came—no one knew where. After a year of silence and absence upon her part it is said that her husband relented and came in unavailing search of his runaway wife."

"Anyway," interrupted the listener, "it's an appealing story to gain interest for a much advertised singer."

"If you please," asked Jinny next day of the singer, and blushed at her boldness, "will you give me two more tickets for tomorrow night's concert. I would like to come and bring a friend."

The man stared surprised for an instant, then laughed and tossed two tickets upon the flower stand.

"Liked it did you?" he asked.

"So much!" said Jinny. Bravely she made her request. "There was a song that my mother used to sing 'Just a-wearying for you'—and I wondered—" All Jinny's appeal was in her eyes.

"If I'd sing it?" The tenor fastened his boutonniere. "By request," he added laughingly.

"I will," he promised impulsively.

Jinny watched feverishly for a woman's shabby figure as she waited for her father to come and close up her stock for the day. Homeward hurried autos and people everywhere, the tenor's taxi would soon bring the singer to a hotel near by—and there in the doorway at last lingered fearfully the small dark-eyed woman.

"Good evening," said Jinny. The girl came slowly forward.

"I was rather rude in refusing your gift yesterday," she drawled softly.

"Madame!" breathed Jinny, her soul in the effort, "if you would be kind enough but to go with me to the entrance, later, when the concert is well on its way—"

"Why—I will go," the woman agreed.

With a kindly air she led the hesitating flower girl through the brilliant entrance and on to the rear of the great hall—then turned to leave her there—when—she paused uncertainly, trembling before the tones of a silvery voice. "Wearyin' an' wonderin' when you'll be comin' home again," sang the voice—"Just-a-wearyin—for you."

Jinny waited until her companion arose hastily to join the departing throng.

"I didn't realize," she said confusedly, "that I was staying."

Deliberately Jinny blocked the way. "Please," she begged, "stay a little longer, he meant that song for you and soon he'll be coming—"

But the singer was already there.

"Katharine," he said huskily, and put forth his hand.

The communion service and reception of new members at the Trinity Reformed Church, was splendidly attended. Ninety-nine partook of the Lord's Supper while 7 united with the church.

The services in the evening in behalf of the boys returning home from service overseas and from camp were greatly treasured by all who had the good fortune to be present. All enjoyed the occasion save one star which turned to gold. Miss Randall, of Buffalo, N. Y., sang a solo while Miss Rhoads, of St. Louis, Mo. furnished a violin selection. The Walhonding Cornet Band was present and furnished appropriate music for the occasion. Rev Hawn and Prof Hoburg made short addresses.

ENGLAND CELEBRATES WAR'S FIFTH BIRTHDAY

LONDON, Aug 9.—The fifth anniversary of England's declaration of war against Germany falling on a regular bank holiday was utilized today for several official and unofficial peace celebrations which are to be eliminated [illegible] Joy Day, July 19.

Old Father Thames had the stage [illegible] morning when [illegible] procession headed by King George and Queen Mary in [illegible] Barge proceeded from Tower Bridge up the river to Chelsea. Great crowds of holiday seekers thronged the banks and bridges and the river was swarming with craft of every description [illegible] aquatic marshals in the person of the Thames police and the King's Watermen had considerable difficulty in keeping a clear course for the procession of boats.

The king and the royal party boarded the gorgeous state barge at the Tower and amid fanfares of trumpets and salutes proceeded to the head of the procession. The King's Bargemaster W. G. East, an officer whose duties in ordinary times are to look after the swans and royal waterfowl, came to his own today and in a fifteenth-century resplendent in crimson and gold, acted as admiral over the thirty-two sturdy watermen also wearing Tudor period uniforms emblazoned with the royal cipher who propelled the distinguished party. An escort of the picturesque Yeomen of the guard looking as tho they had just stepped from a pictorial history book and armed with huge halberts, also assisted.

The royal party disembarked at Chelsea hospital pier for the remainder of the day. The river was thronged with boats and picnic parties.

ON SUNSET HILL

By CHRISTINE HAYES.

As she [illegible] on her hat Anne Waring suppressed a savage desire to tear it into shreds and instead smiled encouragingly at her reflection in the cheap square mirror.

"A good, brisk walk, and you'll be a new woman," she decided.

A good, brisk walk was Anne's stock remedy for a dark [illegible] afternoon. It had never failed her [illegible] she was seldom troubled with dark blue afternoons.

Indirectly she [illegible] was responsible for this one—[illegible] a tive impulse. [illegible], a thoughtless remark was to blame, one of those [illegible] by their very [illegible].

It was [illegible] at the office [illegible] to see her sister [illegible] old niece. Ruth [illegible] "Oh, auntie, I [illegible] hat! Don't you [illegible] so much more [illegible] people?"

Now, drawing on her gloves, she peered into the mirror again, more closely. Yes, the lines at the corners of her mouth were deepening. Picking up her muff she walked down the stairs rather slowly. At the street door she paused a moment, feeling as though she were about to face the world in a new character.

Once outside however, the clear, cold air brought a rose pink to her cheeks and a sparkle to her eyes, and gradually her sense of depression slipped away before the thousand-and-one interesting things Anne always managed to see on her way.

"I'll walk out to Rolf," she decided, "and just about get there in time to see the sunset from that hill. Then I can take the car back."

Out in the more open spaces of the suburbs, Anne faced her problem squarely.

"You must get used to the idea Anne Waring," she admonished herself. "You are middle-aged—middle aged. I don't think it's the growing old that you mind, though, so much as the growing old in office-lodging house restaurant surroundings. And your surroundings are your own fault; but it's too late now. You were foolish enough to let a silly quarrel with Peter spoil your whole life!"

But in spite of herself Anne's mind dwelt on Peter Lee rather wistfully. Peter and she had been engaged for almost a year when a dispute had occurred over some trivial matter. To the dismay of each of them the dispute had of its own accord it seemed taken on the proportions of a quarrel. Both had been obstinate and proud, and at last Peter had gone away. Anne had never heard from him since.

She was still thinking of him when she reached Sunset Hill. She had timed her walk well, for the drama of the sunset was just being staged, the pine trees black against the glory of the flaming sky. Breathlessly Anne watched its gorgeous sl[illegible].

"Anne Waring! What are you doing on my hill? Didn't you see the trespass signs? But the Spirit of Lost Happiness heeds no trespass signs. I, of all men might have known that."

At her name Anne had turned, to see Peter Lee.

"But—I'm not the Spirit of Lost Happiness," she protested, feeling strangely as though she had parted only yesterday.

"Well, if you're not the Spirit of Lost Happiness [illegible] be the Spirit of H[illegible]. Anne [illegible] lost, you [illegible]. You see, you're [illegible] that I'm [illegible] some kind [illegible] me—"

COUNTRY NEEDS A MILLION NEW HOUSES AT ONCE

WASHINGTON, Aug 9—The United States is 1,000,000 houses behind the needs of its people, Senator Calder, New York asserted today in a senate speech urging congressional action to stimulate home building.

Calder advocated passage of his bill creating a home loan bank, the establishment of which he said would make available $2,000,000,000 for home construction.

High rents must continue, Calder warned, unless some way is found to increase the number of home owners.

Abnormal profits in building materials should be reduced he said.

"My opinion is that we are not for many years going to have any cheaper construction. [illegible] that the wages of workmen [illegible] still in [illegible] these wages [illegible] are not too high," said Calder.

In the United States every year there is need of approximately $6,000,000,000 of building construction to meet the demands of the country. Of this total perhaps [illegible] is required for housing people.

Made In Coshocton

A TIRE NATIONALLY KNOWN AS THE BEST THAT MONEY CAN BUY

After years of struggling in competition with the largest tire manufacturers of the country, Coshocton is now possessed of an industry that has fought its way to the front and secured a reputation for marketing a product that commands the attention of every motorist.

Competing, not only with the largest manufacturers of high grade automobile casings, the Midland Tire & Rubber Company has successfully produced a medium priced tire that has established itself among the users of unguaranteed tires as is shown by the reception that the trade has given them.

The tires are built in a modern and up-to-date plant by skilled workmen, a large percentage of whom were trained here at home—men of our own community and thus the prosperity [illegible] by this concern [illegible] to the business of Coshocton. While the larger part of their output is sold in other cities, yet many local car owners have realized the true worth of the industry to our community as well as the exceptional value offered in their products and a great many tires are today in use thru out Coshocton and Coshocton county.

As there is practically no selling expense connected with local sales they are thus able to give the best value in material and workmanship to local customers at far less than other manufacturers, in both the McCLURG 5000 mile guaranteed tire and the unguaranteed PEERLESS tire.

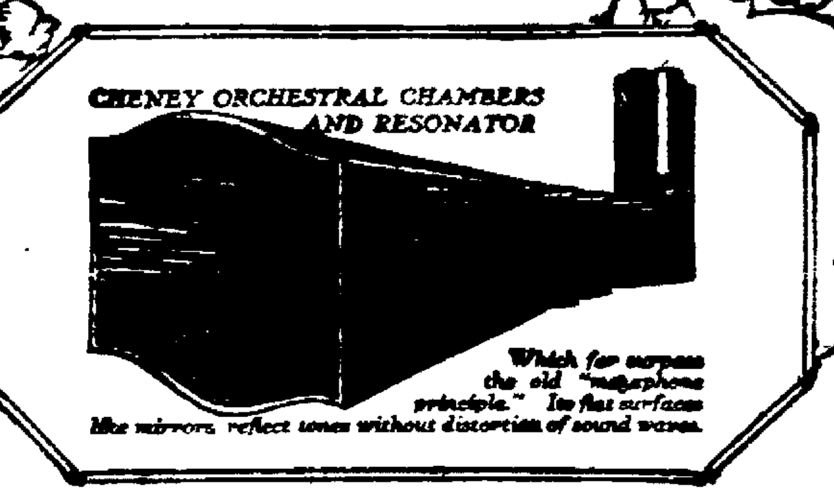

The management of The Midland Tire & Rubber Company which is composed of Dr. H. R. McCurdy, president, and C. M. Christenson, treasurer and general manager, is undoubtedly deserving of the support and patronage shown by local people for giving to this city another industry which has made Coshocton one of the greatest manufacturing centers in the state.

The Longer You Own A Cheney The Sweeter It Plays

The CHENEY PHONOGRAPH

AS AGE has added tonal richness to violins made by old Italian masters, so Cheney Tones gain beauty with years.

This unique quality is directly attributable to the Cheney resonator which is carved with violin lines from seasoned spruce and suspended free from the cabinet walls. This permits it to vibrate, as a violin does, and there seems to be a molecular change in the wood which adds sweetness and quality to the tones.

Thus, the tonal purity and mellowness of the Cheney is of increasing value, and it becomes a prized heirloom to be handed down from generation to generation.

The County Farmer

A Department Conducted In the Interest of Scientific, Efficient Farming, By G. C. Musgrove, Coshocton-co Farm Agent, National Bank-bldg., Coshocton, Ohio.

A. E. M. Fresno, Ohio, asked the following questions:

How and when would you sow rye and vetch on land that has been in corn this year?

Who in this county, has corn and soy beans planted together?

Can you sell three registered Red Polled bulls for me, from three to ten months old, also have some Chester White Service Boars?

Why has the county agricultural society changed its premium lists as it did. Offering only single premiums to county exhibitors?

What are the chances of that Shorthorn sale this fall?

Why not have Chester White hogs and Shorthorn cattle?

Is there any possibility of organizing a Chester White Association?

Answers—

Rye and vetch may be sown immediately in the corn, provided you are able to get thru with the cultivator to cover the seed, if this is not possible you will have to wait until the corn is cut, because the seed needs to be covered this time of the year. I presume this is for a cover crop ,and I would like to get as great a variety as possible for this purpose. I would seed vetch and crimson clover, with a little rape at this time, and sow enough rye after the corn is cut to make the desired thickness of stand.

The men who have planted corn with soy beans, that come to my mind at the present moment are Mr. Sol. Lapp, Isleta, O; Nathan Bechtol, Layland, O.; B. O. Stingel, Coshocton.; Geo. Stonehocker, Coshocton; and Everett Darling, Nellie, O.

In regard to the sale of the livestock, will say we have placed your name on our list ,and if any one inquires in regard to these kinds of cattle or hogs, we will be glad to refer them to you.

The Shorthorn sale will be held the second week of next June, according to information from the officers of Chester White hogs with the Shorthorn cattle, I would not be in position to give information, as it depends entirely upon the decision of the members of the executive committee of the Shorthorn Association.

As to the formation of a Chester White Breeders Association, I should think there would be every opportunity in the world to do so, and the steps to take in this matter would be, to get a list of the men who are breeders of the Chester Whites and have them meet at some central point, say Coshocton, and if there is not too large a number, we will be glad to accommodate them at the Farm Bureau office, and if the breeders at the above meeting deem advisable an association could easily be formed.

Run Out Pastures.

Your last question in regard to improving run out pastures is certainly a very important one, and one that needs a great deal of attention in this county, as there are many pastures that are hardly paying the tax, because of their general unproductiveness. These pastures can be improved by the application of lime, phosphorus and grass seed. You can not afford to apply as much lime on pasture lands as you can on cultivated fields, but I would appiy about 1000 pounds of lime per acre ,about 200 pounds acid phosphate, and the following pasture mixture:

Seven pounds Kentucky Blue Grass
Three pounds timothy
Three pounds red top
Three pounds orchard grass.
Two pounds medium red clover
Two pounds alsike.

The acid phosphate and lime may be applied to the top of the ground and disked in, and then the seed may be sown and harrowed in, or put in with a disk drill, the disk drill being preferred But on steep lands the harrow would be preferable than the drill Avoid dragging the clods and sod together as much as possible This disking and seeding may be done either in August or early spring the present condition of the ground is very good for improvement of old pastures, as the recent rains have moistened the soil until it can be easily disked Or if the above can not be done the land can be plowed and put into a grain crop, of course, you would have to increase the amount of acid phosphate and lime, in this case Pastures may be improved by the applications of phosphorus and lime alone, but it is preferable to apply the seed.

VOGEL'S MINSTREL TO APPEAR SOON

Manager Hagan of the Sixth Street theater announces that John W Vogel's Minstrel will come to Coshocton Wednesday, August 20.

The following is comment on the show from The Springfield Sun:

John W. Vogel's Big Minstrels which appeared at the Sun theater yesterday afternoon and evening to two capacity houses, takes one back to the palmy days of Barlow, Wilson, Primrose and West, when that celebrated quartet of burnt cork artists was reorganized as the king bees of minstrelsy

Nor does the offering provided by Mr Vogel suffer in comparison with any minstrel organization that has played this city in recent years. It sticks to the old minstrel traditions which makes it all the more enjoyable to those who care for a real dyed in the wool minstrel performance

From the beginning of the first part with its beautiful stage settings and electrical effects, through an excellent vaudeville program to the close of the performance things are kept going at a high rate of speed

The comedy portion was furnished by a clever group of end-men whose quips and jokes were fresh and original, especially those old by Harry Ford.

The comedians were Pop Sank, Harley Morton, Steve Berman, Harry Ford, Bobby Guyot, Mike Handly and the Lund Brothers.

An olio of vaudeville acts included the act of Harley Morton, who plays all sorts of musical instruments. Pop Sank won his way into the good graces of the audience with songs and jokes The Great Andrews, performed feats of ambidexterity. The Victory Quartette rendered up-to-date vocal selections which were worth the price of admission The closing number, The Darktown Musical and Dancing Revue, kept the audience in an uproar until the fall of the curtain The performance as a whole was bright and snappy. Come again, Mr. Vogel. You're welcome.

Ed. Heinke Republican Candidate For Mayor

E W Heinke, president of The Coshocton Specialty Company, has been identified with Coshocton industry and its people for many years, having been a resident of the city for the past 12 years He however became associated with one of the city's oldest manufacturing industries, The Tuscarora Advertising Co, now the American Art Works, way back in 1896 He was continuously in the service of this institution until The Coshocton Specialty Company was organized about eight years ago Soon after his connection with the old "Tusky" the management soon recognized his ability as a business producer and he became sales manager of their northwestern office at Minneapolis, Minn., and until he became a resident of Coshocton he was one of their biggest business producers, thereby stimulating business for Coshocton for the benefit of Coshocton people

Heinke seeks the Republican nomination for mayor next Tuesday He has served the city as councilman for the past four years. The citizens know his aggressiveness for he has led and has been active in many movements for the interest of the people as well as for the interest of the city.

During the gas controversy some time ago he took an active part in opposing the increased gas rate He has always been found to work for the good of the community Now is the time when the city should nominate and elect a man that is active and aggressive as well Mr Heinke has shown himself to be a hard worker in any movement that he has ever undertaken which has been proven by his activity as a member of the city council. He is familiar with the city's affairs which enables him to discharge the duties of mayor to the best interests of the people

Mr. Heinke is a live wire not only part of the time but all the time, which has been shown by his past record, and if he serves the city as its mayor that activity can be assured thruout his entire administration. His friends are satisfied that if elected Coshocton will be on the map by keeping in line with the most progressive cities, for he is progressive, ambitious and will render the city services that will be in keeping with the desire of the community An administration that will not only be progressive but also economical and conservative He has the confidence and good will of all who know him Every Republican vote for him will mean a vote for a greater and better Coshocton

Mark your ticket for Heinke next Tuesday.

REDUCTION OF PRICES TURNED OVER TO SOLONS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9. — President Wilson, having handed the high cost of living problem over to congress at least for the time being, turned his attention today to plans for his tour of the United States.

It was believed, however, that he would touch on the high cost of living in his speeches

In his address to congress yesterday, the president said there can be no real peace prices until there is peace. He is expected to use this argument in his campaign Before Wilson goes on tour he may hold a series of white house conferences with Representatives of both capital and labor to discuss present economic conditions and the remedy for certain evils.

In his speech he said many things should be corrected in the relations between capital and labor and that he was ready to confer on these matters with "men who know what they are talking about."

Converted Chapels in London.

Other London places of worship have been converted to secular uses besides the Bedford Congregational chapel, Somers town, where a co-operative laundry is being organized. By far the most interesting of these from an antiquarian point of view is the Moravian chapel in Chelsea, now an artist's studio, says London Tit-Bits. The old chapel, with its walled and disused graveyard, forms a picturesque corner of the Chelsea loved by artists. Its first tenant under the new conditions discovered before moving in that the changes made for his benefit were not the first the building had undergone. It was an adaptation of Sir Thomas More's stables, the Tudor brickwork and foundations being unmistakable. The adjacent horse trough is also Tudor work.

Grouch and Bad Health.

Yep, He Would Be a Sight to See.

"In all my travels hither and yon and return," remarked the facetious feller, "I never ran across a man who was so color blind he couldn't distinguish a roll of greenbacks."

COUNCILMAN

ing the project "There is no question concerning its disposal here and within a short time ,three or four days at the most. I stand ready to offer my services in any way, but I do not feel able personally to finance the project. Practically no trouble would be experienced in securing volunteer help and I see no reason, whatever, why Coshocton should not receive her share of the goods."

Temple Endorses.

"It would be a wise move and the city is justly entitled to it" was the expression of R. M. Temple, Republican candidate for the mayoralty nomination when asked concerning the project of bringing a car load of government food to this city. "Doubtless it could be disposed of easily."

Albertson For It.

"I would have attended to it long ago" said J. F Albertson, Democratic candidate for the mayoralty nomination, "and I stand now ready to offer my services ,financially and otherwise."

McCoy's Suggestion.

"The old Sycamore schoolhouse could be used as a distributing point for government food" was the idea advanced by Councilman William McCoy, Democratic candidate for mayoralty nomination, in endorsing the project that Coshocton receive a car load of government foodstuff "I believe in it firmly and we should have received it long before this The situation here is just as serious as in other cities, which have secured it and the outlay is small compared with the good that it would accomplish."

Dining a la Plane.

"Some day," remarked the gourmet, "we shall be able to dine perfectly. Many cities have their food specialities, and unless eaten on the spot they are never so good. There's where the swift airplane comes in. I shall begin my meal in Boston with steamed clams. Ten minutes later I shall be in New York enjoying a plate of delicious turtle soup. This is followed by a planked shad in Philadelphia and chicken and waffles 'Maryland style' in Baltimore. Next on to Richmond for a course of Virginia ham and salad To Florida for dessert, and then, the wind being favorable I cross to Cuba for a perfect cigar and the meal is finished."—Boston Transcript.

ARRESTS IN FOOD PROBE ARE COMING

COLUMBUS, O., Aug 9.—No arrests for violation of the Smith cold storage act will come for a few days in the state probe of profiteers, was the word given out at the state house today

Plans for arrests yesterday were called off at the suggestion of Gov Cox who believes that if arrests were made at present it may tip some violators off and give them the opportunity to cover up.

Attorney General Price today mailed out to each of the 88 prosecutors of Ohio a questionnaire relative to the investigation situation in the various counties .

Slightly Bewildering.

"Dad, what is a roost?" asked Charlie. "A roost, my son, is a pole upon which chickens sit at night," replied his father. "And what's a perch, dad?" "A perch is what chickens perch on." "Then I suppose, dad, a chicken could roost on a perch?" came the further inquiry. "Of course!" was the smiling reply. "And they could perch on a roost?" "Why, y-yes!" answered dad. "But if chickens perched on a roost, that would make the roost a perch, wouldn't it? But, if just after some chickens had perched on a roost and made it a perch, some more chickens came along and roosted on the perch and made it a roost, then the roost would be a perch and the perch would be a roost, and some of the chickens would be perchers and the others would be roosters, and—well, there!"

Reason for "Greenbacks."

Why the United States bank notes are printed with green backs is not generally known, although there is most excellent reason for it. The great drawback to paper currency is the likelihood of its being counterfeited, and therefore experts are constantly at work to contrive ways of making it impossible to copy such bills. Stacy J. Edson was the man who in 1857 invented the green ink that Uncle Sam uses on his bank bills The ink which was patented, is anti-photographic—that is, it cannot be photographed, nor can counterfeiters in trying to get a facsimile of the notes remove it with alkalies. The secret of the ingredients of the ink is of course carefully preserved.

THE RED UMBRELLA

By JACK LAWTON.

The old lady in the dressing gown raised an imperious finger.

"You may now go to luncheon, Miss Barrie," she said.

And Miss Barrie, who had been changed by fortune's wand from merry Betty Berrie of Willowdale into a serious minded "companion," closed the desk over various lavender tinted notes, and gazed through the window.

"It is raining," she murmured. "I shall get a wetting."

"Nonsense!" ejaculated the old lady. "you will take my umbrella."

"But it is such a beautiful thing," Betty demurred—"if anything should happen to it—"

"What could happen to an umbrella between here and the restaurant?" her employer caustically remarked.

So graciously thanking her, the "companion" picked up the umbrella and went. At least "companion" was the word under which Betty's position had been designated in the want columns of the city paper, which found its way to her village home.

When she had closed the lately desolated home and started out upon the path of independence, Betty found that being "companion" in her case, meant, a combination of nurse and secretary as well. And doing her very best, met with slight reward.

She wondered wistfully, as she trudged on toward the restaurant, why it should happen that the formerly cherished daughter of the old village doctor should be walking wet pavements, with no rubbers to protect her thin shoes, while other girls raised no more carefully flew past in luxurious cars. These girls wore rich furs, often their own hands controlled the shining machines, while they laughed back in confident happiness at others as fortunate as they. Some were married. Betty was sure of this, from the proud proprietary air of their masculine escorts. And the new thought came to her, that she would never ride, a proud wife in her own automobile. If, indeed, she married at all it would be to some toiling man whose humble home would necessitate the constant labor of her hands.

"No," reflected Betty, "every way you look at it, life's luxuries are not for me. And after all—" her smile flashed out at the thought—"the rain is not raining on me, and I'm carrying an expensive umbrella."

It was a beautiful umbrella. The imperious old lady's wealthy daughter had given it to her as a gift.

Her despondent mood had suddenly vanished—it was good to be young and alive, it was good to be—of use. Through the gloom the restaurant lights beckoned across the way.

Betty started to cross the road, then drew back at the warning horn of an auto. She realized, as a girl threw back an apologetic smile, that one of the favored ones had almost run her down. She must be more careful, the alarming scream of the auto horn seemed still to ring confusedly in her ears.

She had a glimpse of a white-faced terror-stricken man at the wheel, and then desperately Betty clutched the pearl handle of the red silk umbrella, pushing with all her strength its frail protection against the black object which almost crushed her.

Almost—but at that very moment, the brakes did their work. Panting like a frustrated animal the automobile stood still, while the white-faced man opened the door, and sprang to Betty's side.

"You are not hurt?" he gasped, "it—did not—hit you?".

Without awaiting an answer, he picked her up quickly in his arms and seated her in the car.

"Didn't you hear me sound the horn?" he gently persisted.

Then out of her vast relief, Betty laughed.

"Oh! I heard horns," she said, "everywhere. I do not blame you. You see—I'm from the country."

The man heaved a sigh of relief, then he also smiled.

"And don't you know," he added whimsically, "that it's useless to try to stop automobiles with a red signal; a train might stop perhaps, but not a machine."

"It was not useless in this case," Betty told him, then she looked down in consternation.

"It is broken," she said aghast, "smashed to pieces. It was a borrowed umbrella, and I never could buy one like it."

"As for that," said the man he was busily writing his name and address across a page from a note book—"I will be glad to replace the umbrella. That's my plain duty. When you find one just like it, send the bill to me. And now—shall I drive you home?"

Betty was reading with wide eyes the man's scribbled name. It was a name of prominence which she had often read quoted upon matters of authority toward her, and smiled.

"Or," he suggested "shall we go and purchase that umbrella now?"

"If you please," Betty gratefully agreed.

And that ride, leaning back against the soft cushions, was to be but the first of many. For as Betty rides now, at the side of the driver, he wears the proud proprietary air of the husband, and tucked in some place near them both is always carried a red silk umbrella.

Doing the Big Things.

Most people stand in awe of the big things of life. The great mass of mankind is satisfied if it can stand on speaking terms with genius. Only the few realize that genius is consecration to a task until it's mastered. The great inventions of the age are matters of discovery and patient experiment. If they were "plain as day" everybody would be in the limelight. It's only when men have advanced beyond the recognized bounds that they come to the realms of great things. That brings them into undiscovered territory. There is where the new things are. If you are afraid to advance you just naturally fall into the ranks of the ordinary and the commonplace.

Giving and Doing.

It is the giving up of life that saves it. When we stop calling it our own, seeking to hoard it and enrich it for ourselves, and begin bestowing it in loving interest and service upon others, we find that it has suddenly become richer and stronger than ever before.

FAN

By JACK LAWTON.

The Rev. Roland Reed had not been in Cartersville two hours before he heard of Fan. Everybody heard of Fan eventually. Were not her mysteries the town's chief topic of gossip?

Mrs. Randolph, sister of this merry-hearted visitor, had settled among them a few years ago, and Fan, left homeless, came to live with her. Mrs. Randolph was exclusive. "Stuck up," Cartersville called her—but this busy mother of young and mischievous children had no time to spend in village visits.

Quietly each day she made her round of the stores while her big husband returned at evening from his city office. Fan was the one speculative element of the family. Frequently she disappeared and reappeared again with no explanation or notice of absence in the village paper. Having sufficient at her command, it was known that no necessary occupation called her to the city. Neither, she cheerfully informed a curious inquirer, did she spend the time there visiting friends. Further particulars of her trips were not given.

"Goes after the beaux, I reckon," said Mrs. Evans. And if that were Fan's purpose she surely succeeded. Seldom was she known to return home unattended from meeting.

"Did she not tell you," Mrs. Randolph would regretfully ask an abject caller "that she intended going away? She is in the city?"

It was the young rector's housekeeper who pointed Fan out to him soon after his arrival.

"There goes that wild Hilton girl in her brother-in-law's car," she said, "seems to me I'd find a better companion for my children."

The Reverend Roland, looking through his study window, saw an automobile which appeared to be filled to overflowing with laughing children, and—so the Reverend Roland thought—the loveliest girl he had ever seen, at the wheel.

"Wish you'd talk to the frivolous creature," Mrs. Evans later besought him. "Our last rector tried. Fan listened real attentive, he said, but it didn't do no good."

The Reverend Roland was troubled. As time went on he grew more troubled. Fan selected to play in his church one Sunday, and the sympathetic quality of her voice touched his honest heart with an influence which would not be dismissed.

"Careless! with a voice like that," the rector reproved his own thought.

In a way he and Fan became friendly, but when he would have walked with her down the village street she refused in her own laughing, positive way.

"Your people wouldn't like it," said Fan.

The continued tirade against the girl now tormented him; then came a night when the young rector was called peremptorily into the city. He had barely time to catch the midnight train, and had been thinking pleasantly when the phone call came of his evening with Fan; for she had allowed him to walk from choir practice with her as far as his own door, and had promised to bring pulpit flowers to the church in the morning. Perhaps then he might be able to talk with her.

As the rector reflected the midnight train rolled on its cityward way; a low laugh caused him to glance up quickly. Fan was there in the car seat beside him.

"A late trip into the city, Miss Hilton."

"Yes," she nodded noncommittingly.

"You said nothing about intending to leave town when I saw you tonight," he persisted.

Fan smiled wickedly. "I decided to leave only twenty minutes ago," she said.

Confidentially she leaned toward him.

"I thought it better to get away without argument before my sister and her husband returned from the theater," she added.

The young minister frowned. "I am afraid," he said, "that I do not understand you."

"I am afraid you don't," Fan cheerfully agreed.

"You will at least," he stiffly requested, "allow me to see you safely to your destination. It will be long after midnight when we reach the city."

"Thanks," Fan carelessly replied; "no need. I'll call a taxi."

For some miles they rode on in silence.

"Would you mind," Fan asked plaintively, "if I use your coat for a while as a pillow; I'm dreadfully tired."

She looked tired, childish also, and in need of protecting care. A great tenderness filled the heart of Roland Reed.

"Fan," he burst out, "will you tell me why you are hurrying into the city tonight?"

The girl's dark eyes softened. "Yes," she answered, "I will tell you. I'm a settlement worker there, interested in a home for destitute children. They phoned me tonight that an epidemic has broken out among them, and that the urgent need of nurses is more than can be supplied, so I'm going in—to take care of the sick babies. Do I meet with your approval, reverend sir?"

But already Fan knew the answer to her question.

Election Expenses.

This story of the election expenses of a Georgia man who was defeated for county commissioner reaches us by way of the Newark Leader in a dispatch from Atlanta. His sworn statement runs: "Lost, 1,394 hours of sleep thinking about the election. Lost two front teeth and a whole lot of hair in a personal encounter with an opponent. Donated one beef, four shoats and five sheep to a county barbecue. Gave away two pairs of suspenders, four calico dresses, $5 cash and 13 baby rattles. Kissed 126 babies. Kindled 14 kitchen fires. Put up four stoves. Walked 4,076 miles. Shook hands with 9,505 persons. Told 10,101 lies, and talked enough to make, in print, 1,000 volumes. Attended 16 revival meetings, and was baptized four different times by immersion, and twice some other way. Contributed $50 to foreign missions, and made love to nine grass widows. Hugged 49 old maids. Got dog-bit 39 times, and was defeated."

Native Surgery.

Binghi, a native of Australia, was never much of a surgeon according to a correspondent in the Sydney Bulletin, yet he liked mutilating himself or his wife. In the old tribal days operations of all kinds were practiced, from the simple one of breaking a tooth off to mending a broken limb. Others were bestial and indescribable. The New South Wales North coast tribes always appointed a fisherwoman in each family. This worker was known by the absence of two joints of the little finger on her left hand. String spider-web was tied round the second joint and left on till the flesh mortified. When that had taken place the finger was held in the opening of an ants' nest till it was eaten away.

CONGRESS OPENS ACTIVE BATTLE WITH PROFITEERS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Congress took first definite action today on President Wilson's suggestions for a reduction of the high cost of living.

At a conference of the senate interstate commerce commission Chairman Cummins was authorized to name a sub committee to begin work along the lines outlined in the president's message. The sub-committee personnel will be announced Monday.

The sub-committee is to study not only the president's recommendations but the whole situation with a view to deciding how much additional legislation is needed and how much can be accomplished by administrative and executive departments under present laws.

Famous Welshman.

One of the famous men born in Wales was Robert Record, who first saw the light of day in Tenby about 1510. According to "Enwogion Cymru" he was the first writer on arithmetic in English, the first on geometry, the first person who introduced the knowledge of algebra into England, the first writer on astronomy in English, the first man in the country to adopt the Copernican system, the inventor of the present method of extracting the square root and the inventor of the sign of equality now adopted by the civilized world. There is a memorial to him in Tenby church.

Laws of Motion.

The three principles or axioms, known as the laws of motion, which were laid down by Sir Isaac Newton, are: (1) If a body be started in motion, and if no force act upon it, that body will continue in motion in the same direction, and with the same velocity. (2) Change of motion is proportioned to the acting force, and takes place in the direction of the straight line in which the force acts. (3) To every action there is always an equal and contrary reaction; or, the mutual actions of any two bodies are always equal and oppositely directed in the same straight line.

DROP IN FOOD PRICES LOOKED FOR AT ONCE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9—That food prices would begin to show a decline within the next two or three days as the result of the government's campaign to bring them down is the belief tonight of the United States officials who are directing the fight. The reports thus far received have not shown a real decrease, but pointed out that there has hardly been time yet for the government to be advised of the downward trend The markets are being closely watched, and government agents are keeping in close touch with retailers.

Pecan Tree Valuable.

Of the nuts which are in general demand on the market the pecan brings the highest price, so that some of these big trees which are good bearers are decidedly valuable possessions. In fact, it is doubtful if there is another kind of individual wild tree which yields so much in dollars and cents as one of these big trees. Large pecan trees are known to frequently yield half a ton of nuts and the value of the crop of a single tree may be easily $100. An account was recently received by the Journal of Heredity of a large tree near San Antonio, Tex., measuring 15 feet in circumference which yields as much as 2,000 pounds of nuts in a single season.

Flying Fish.

The flying fish of the tropics, which is between ten and twelve inches long, is very like the herring, silvery and gray, flies or leaps through the air, rising and falling out of the sea by means of winglike fins attached to its breast. Another familiar fish that glides or leaps is the flying gurnet, that also takes short trips out of the water to glide through the air for 25 feet or so, then rests in the water, and jumps onward again and again, with remarkable quickness, and without tiring.

SNAPPY RACE BILL ASSURED AT FAIR

Early Closing Entries Smash All Records---Purses $11,500.

The snappiest horse-racing ever witnessed on the fast Ohio State Fair track is in prospect for the exposition the last week in August. Early closing entries have smashed all records and these have been so large it is said, that it may be necessary to split the events in order to accommodate the field of horses

There are 33 entries in the closed event for Ohio three-year-old trotters on Thursday for the governor's purse of $1,500. 34 entries for the 2:16 pace on Wednesday for $1,500, and 42 entries for the 2:20 pace on Monday for $1,000

The program calls for three races on each day of the fair. Purses amount to $11,500. Horsemen declare the track at the state fair grounds is one of the fastest half-mile speedways in the country. The half-mile track is generally popular among racing enthusiasts it is pointed out as it gives spectators an opportunity to cover the course twice. A large number of "favorites" has been booked for this year's racing

A state fair hardly would be such in Ohio without a large exhibition of horticultural products As a rule, Ohio growers provide a show that has but few equals, and the horticultural building always is filled with large and admiring crowds

While not a bountiful crop in general there is much fine fruit in Ohio this year and it is expected that the best from orchards and vineyards will be on display at the fair in competition for the $2,500 in premiums E C Cotton is superintendent of horticultural exhibits There is a class for county fruits

THE Rainbow Band, one that is destined to have a page in the book of fame, will render daily concerts at the Ohio State Fair the last week in August

Part of the famed Rainbow Division, these soldier musicians who performed notable service in the war, make a band that is one of the best in the country. All was not music with these men while they were in service abroad. For six months they acted as stretcher-bearers and messengers while the Rainbows were pressing on to victory and at the same time furnished music that kept their comrades in good cheer.

All visitors to the fair will have opportunity to hear the Rainbow Band which is directed by Lieutenant W. A. Sands

2,000 CHILDREN IN BIG PAGEANT

Columbus Schools Will Appear in State Fair Offering.

Two thousand Columbus school children will take part in "The World Forward," the reconstruction pageant which will be presented at 4 o'clock each afternoon at the Ohio State Fair the last week in August. It is planned to be the most elaborate and distinctive yet undertaken by the Columbus municipal department of public recreation, and will be staged in the big enclosure in which the great pageant "The Wayfarer" was presented at the recent Methodist centenary celebration.

Striking and stirring episodes of a patriotic nature are promised, with folk and esthetic dance numbers, presented by large groups and solo numbers of a captivating and inspiring character. There are also will be six pantomimic interludes, carrying the story forward to the point where it connects with the interpretative scenes. Brilliant processionals, too, will mark the climaxes, and the musical accompaniment chosen is of an impressive kind.

The pageant has been composed and will be staged by J. Clarence Sullivan of Columbus. Special costumes have been made for all of the participants. Several original dances have been devised to interpret the themes of the special episodes. Paraphernalia to be used in the spectacle, which is free to fair patrons is being constructed and decorated by pupils in the manual training classes of Columbus public schools

LABOR TROUBLES INVOLVE 100,000 WORKMEN TODAY

WASHINGTON, Aug 9—Strikes, lock outs and industrial controversies now affect, directly or indirectly more than 100,000 workmen and families, labor department officials estimated tonight This estimate is believed to be below the total number of men involved thruout the country, it was stated.

Where is the Ocean Deepest?

A most peculiar fact about the oceans of the world is that the largest depressions are to be found near the coast lines The three largest of these are all in the Pacific, two of them being near island coast lines. The Swire deep, just off the Philippines, measures no less than 33,000 feet from the surface of the ocean to the bottom. This is just 3,000 feet deeper than Mt. Everest, in Asia, is high. The Aldridge deep, in the South Pacific, ranks next to this, being nearly 31,000 feet deep. The third is the Tuscarora deep, near Japan, which soundings indicate to be 27,900 feet in depth. This would then make the bottom of the Tuscarora deep more than two and three-eighths miles below the average level of the bottom of the ocean.—Popular Science Monthly.

Confucian Cemetery.

The grave of Confucius, with those of his descendants of 74 generations, which is now within easy reach of the Tientsin-Pukow railway, is one of the most picturesque spots in China The family cemetery is surrounded by a wall eight to ten miles in circumference. The interior is one vast grove, trees having been planted there since the burial of Confucius 25 centuries ago. Within a mile from the entrance to the Confucian cemetery is the Confucian temple, a set of beautiful Chinese temple buildings, with yellow glazed tiled roofs amidst a grove of ancient cedars. Here is also the ancestral hall of the descendants of Confucius. In close proximity to the Confucian temple is the home of the only surviving descendant of Confucius.

Ventriloquism

Ventriloquism is the art of producing the voice in such fashion that the sound appears to proceed from a source other than the speaker's mouth. The illusion is he ghened by immobility of the visible muscles concerned in speech, as well as by gestures and glances which suggest to the onlooker a false source of the sound. The art of ventriloquism is one which can be acquired. It requires however, so much constant practice that few care to give up their time to it. It also requires personal tuition in order to acquire any expert knowledge of the art

Secret of Longevity.

While other folk get tottery in the knees and have asthma and ear-trumpets long before their time, people on the stage seem to have grasped the happy secret of perennial youth. And this secret consists more in right thinking than in wearing fancy vests and high-school hats. When old Ponce de Leon put on a new pair of knee pants a few centuries ago and started for Palm Beach, Fla., where he had arranged to discover the fountain of youth, he did not understand this great secret of staying young. So he died at last without being able to conceal his real age from anybody. He should have lived now and gone into the movies.—Thrift Magazine.

THE CALL OF DUTY

By NAOMI H. ANDERSON

When Uncle Sam began sending his telegraphic messages to every city and hamlet of the country that stenographers and typists were needed in Washington, Ann Rogers saw them printed in the daily news, read them, wondered if she ought to offer her services and then forgot them, for her daily tasks at Burr & Marchant's seemed quite sufficient for the sum total of her existence, and for three months she ignored Uncle Sam's constant and urgent appeals. But one day, when one of the stenographers came in and calmly announced that she was going to Washington, Ann Rogers took up the newspapers again, read and reread Uncle Sam's appeals and finally decided to follow in the footsteps of the former stenographer.

Two months later having followed the call of "The Great Adventure" (as she called it) she was happily ensconced in one of the offices of the war department busily checking names of applicants for one of the branches of the war service, despite the fact that Burr & Marchant's had offered her a larger salary if she would have remained and quite unaware that beside her an officer whom she had hardly noticed would be a great participator in her "Great Adventure" and forthwith treated him with deliberate unconcern. But the days stretched on to weeks and each day the officer by her side began to loom up of greater and greater interest on the horizon of her happy existence. Finally she admitted even to her coworkers that she thought he was awfully nice; and the days slipped by.

Three months later an order came from the adjutant general's office, ordering First Lieutenant Downs to go to camp, and there he would be assigned to some company for early overseas duty. Ann had known for some weeks that the order was coming through, but the days chased each other so sublimely that she did not realize what the order would mean to her until it came. But when she read the order that within three days he was to report to his commanding officer, she knew. The three days dragged by—they no longer flew—and the nights were an eternity of tears and prayers; but on the morning of the last day when the first lieutenant said good-by Ann was smiling, and for all the world none would have guessed at the tears and prayers. The week following his departure dragged through its course, but the brightness and novelty of the throbbing, crowded city had died for Ann.

One afternoon when a letter arrived from Mr. Marchant asking if Ann would not come back to her old position, she dispatched an immediate reply to the effect that she would be back in three weeks. The next day she handed in her resignation.

"Oh, she's got the blues on account of a sweetheart back home," confided the sergeant to the corporal, but Captain Downs knew, and accepted her resignation.

On the morning that she presented herself at the office of Burr & Marchant she found a beautiful bunch of red roses in a vase on her desk and attached to them was a card bearing Mr. Marchant's name. It occurred to her then he was a bachelor, and she asked herself "Is it possible?" but soon forgot the question in the busy examination of her old desk and typewriter. Later when Mr. Marchant came in she shook hands with him and thanked him for the roses.

"Are you glad to be back in this smoky city?" he teased.

"It's the best city in the world," she returned, laughing.

Again the weeks began slipping by, but Mr. Marchant was quick to notice that the happy laughter in Ann's eyes was gone.

"You ought to take a vacation," he told her one day. "You seem so tired."

"Oh, I'm not tired," she quietly replied.

"Then have a doctor."

"Why?" and her eyes widened.

"You'll be having a nervous breakdown before you know it," he said.

"Why, there's nothing the matter with me, or perhaps it's just a little touch of the blues," she smiled. But she 'd not go to a doctor.

A few days later when Marchant was watching her he saw a soft [illegible] her eyes and the doubt [illegible] seemed to have vanished. And [illegible] said to himself, "He has written to her."

PACKKRS FIRST TO BE PUNISHED IN PRICE PROBE

CHICAGO, Aug. 9. — The packers will be given first attention by federal prosecutors here in the war on high prices according to District Attorney Charles Clyne, who just returned from Washington after conferences with Attorney General Palmer and administration leaders.

Clyne indicated the trials may not be held in Chicago, pointing out the packers have plants in a dozen or more cities. Wherever the evidence appears strongest, Clyne declared, there the action will be started.

HOW MUCH LIMESTONE SHOULD BE USED PER ACRE

In a recent article by Professor Joseph F. Barker, Department of Soils of the Ohio State University, he says that "whether or not a community is making progress in improving the fertility of its soils can be measured best by the size of its orders for limestone and phosphorus." He further says that probably three-fourths of the state will require five tons of limestone per acre to make the surface six inches of soil nonacid. Much of the land in Ohio now being farmed will require ten or more tons of limestone per acre before it can be classed as a neutral or nonacid soil."

TAKE SALTS FOR THE KIDNEYS IF YOUR BACK HURTS

We Should Drink Lots of Water and Eat Less Meat, Says Noted Authority on Kidney Disorders

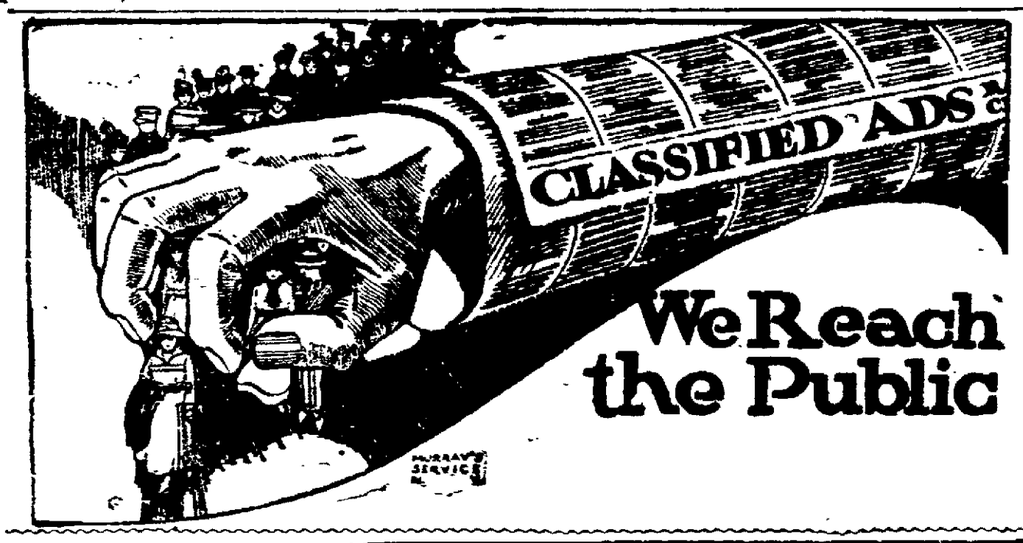

Recommends a Spoonful of Jad Salts In Glass of Water Before Breakfast to Stimulate Kidneys and Eliminate the Uric Acid

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy, the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

RED CROSS EXTENDS ACTIVITIES TO BENEFIT RURAL COMMUNITIES

THE Red Cross is your Red Cross, serving you at home, representing you abroad

It is for you, now that the war emergency is past, to make the most of its far-reaching ability to serve.

Home Service work, undertaken by the Red Cross Department of Civilian Relief, served in war time to aid the families of fighting men and to relieve anxiety of soldiers in camps.

Out of experience gained in this work comes the Red Cross plan for the future. The common objective of all Red Cross work is to improve general living conditions, to conserve the health and to promote the welfare of all people.

In the larger cities community improvement has already reached a high state of development. It is left for the Red Cross to assist in furthering such work at the request of established agencies.

But in the small cities and towns the Red Cross service is only limited by the interest and response of the public to the opportunity offered by the peace time extension of the Red Cross.

Home Service is not charity work. The Red Cross organization is open to all. All may benefit by making the most of its far-reaching ability to serve.

Health, education, the development of the public health nursing idea and allied forms of community betterment work will be dealt with as individual problems where Red Cross assistance is invited.

The Lost Leader.

On the death of Southey, in 1845, William Wordsworth was made poet laureate of England on April 5 of that year. He bargained with Sir Robert Peel, before accepting, that no official verse should be required of him; and his only official composition, an ode on the installment of the prince consort as chancellor of Cambridge university in 1847, is believed to have been written by either his son-in-law or by his nephew Christopher, afterward bishop of Lincoln. Space does not permit an extended review of Wordsworth's reputation as a poet, save to repeat the remark of De Quincey, who said it was militant from 1820 to 1830, and from that time until ten years later it was triumphant.

In a Balcony.

Up in the balcony of a big store's shoe department were boys busy with boxes to whom saleswomen from the floor below called like this: "Send me down a No. 2 Benny—a No. 2 Benny." "A four David, a four David." "I want a three-and-a-half Charlie, understand? A three-and-a-half Charlie." Gradually it dawned upon a woman observer that the names referred not to the boys, but to the boots. "What do you say when you want 'A'?" she asked. "Width 'A'?" repeated the saleswoman; "that's Able." Were there greater variety in women's feet, there might not be enough names to go round the alphabet and up to the balcony.—New York Evening Post.

The Prodigy.

"Oh, my dear professor," cried the fond mamma, "don't you feel that my daughter's piano technique is marvelous?" "Madam," responded the truthful though diplomatic professor, "I can say that in all my experience I have never seen a pupil who could turn her music over with greater expression, or who can perform the rests so feelingly."

IMPORTANT MATTER TO BE VOTED UPON NEXT TUESDAY

There will be presented to the voters of Coshocton city school district next Tuesday the proposition of authorizing a levy of two mills to meet the deficiency existing in the school fund of the district. This was made possible by the last legislature, the law having been passed for the purpose of aiding schools thruout the state.

During the pre-war period the levies that were possible at that time were barely sufficient to meet the ordinary expenses of running the schools and from that time to this the levy for school purposes has not been sufficient to meet the ordinary expenses of running the schools and from that time to this the levy for school purposes has not been sufficient nor could it be on account of the law relating to taxation

In 1914 grade teachers in the city district were paid at a rate of $55 per month and are now receiving $85. high school teachers in 1914 were receiving $80, now $115; special teachers were receiving then $80 and are now demanding $130. This makes an approximate increase in the school payrolls of this city of $1^000 per year. Notwithstanding this increase many of the best teachers are leaving and accepting positions in other schools where higher salaries are paid.

Everything in the way of supplies, fuel, repairs and equipment has increased in the same ratio For example, coal in 1914 was bot for nine cents, now it costs the board of education 17 cents On account of this increase in cost there is a deficiency of several thousand dollars which must be met and unless this levy carries by the vote of the people who have the welfare of the children of the city at heart, the board will be obliged to let a great many teachers go so as to meet the deficiency.

NEW YORK SUN'S FINANCIAL REVIEW

NEW YORK, Aug 9—The New York Evening Sun's financial review today says

Today's market reflected the utmost extent what a Saturday short session could do the distinctly better feeling directly inspired by the president's address to congress

Strength thruout the list, comprising both rails and industrials, was manifest from the beginning. In numerous cases opening prices were one to two points above the Friday close and these gains extended to three to four points by the end of the first hour. The presidential recommendations having for a purpose th amelioration of conditions due to high prices of commodities had been deprived of their worst sting by the previous ocurse of the stock list.

Wall Street was cheered by the feeling that the atmosphere had been clarified by the clear exposition of the situation and proposals to meet it.

All the rails made an unwontedly good showing Union Pacific got back to 126, Atchison ran up to 92½ and Reading sold close to 80. Nothing occurred to impair the constructive tendency of the market in the second hour and buying of good quality was mixed with not a little of short covering Prices held well at or near the top levels of the day In foreign exchange there was further improvement in francs and sterling, the former gaining three centimes to 7.55 and the latter ruling at $4.32

There has been an increase in business failures this week, ending August 7 showing 105 against 85 in the previous week Bank clearings this week totalled $8,[illegible]9,417 against 8,128, $38,045 last week and $5,857,206,006 in this week last year

Where the Folly Lies.

It is hardly ever foolish to do a thing because we want to do it. The folly lies in doing a thing because other people think we ought to want to do it, and we do not.

GOLDEN HEART

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

Sallie sat on the back porch and peeled peaches; she wore a pink print dress and cocked her head upon one side occasionally, to whistle in imitation of a robin in a nearby tree. Sallie seemed always to be perfectly happy; and because she had so very little to make her happy, folks wondered and thought her queer. She was different from those around her, different from the beautiful sister who was Sallie's joy and pride.

How it had happened that Phyllis enjoyed life's benefits and privileges, while Sallie worked about the neat home, no one knew. Least of all, Sallie herself. The tasks had just naturally fallen to her share when the sacrificing mother laid them down forever. And when Phyllis returning from college regarded with veiled contempt the simplicity of her sister's daily routine, Sallie cheerfully hastened to brighten, as it might suit her her sister's days. So Phyllis beautiful and well gowned, rode in costly motorcars or entertained woman friends as she was entertained. Sallie never entered into the parties. She felt constrained and ill at ease among the friends of Phyllis. Their easy chatter about matters of which she knew nothing embarrassed her. Also it was an unnecessary strain upon old Dad's pocketbook—so Sally said—to provide party frocks for two daughters.

"The affairs were really a silly waste of time," she further confided.

And old Dad, whose law practice grew less and less, was relieved by Sallie's decision. She had not told Dad of a recent experience, when Phyllis had coldly asked her to attend a meeting of her club, and had been humiliated. Sallie knew, by her own lack of assurance. She had been a "dolt," she reflected sadly; too confused by the strangeness of it all to answer intelligently simple questions put to her.

So Sallie went back to her own life with its constant duties, and because old Dad confided to her the anxieties of his decreasing income Sallie had accepted the application of two men from the city who wished to spend several weeks as boarders in the country town.

The objections of Phyllis had been overruled by Dad. Phyllis was resumed to the coming of the civil engineer, impressed with that young man's distinguished appearance. But the other would be boarder she designated as "impossible."

"Michael Dawn's references were of the best," her father told her; "Judge Lewis himself was sponsor."

Michael Dawn's appearance was certainly not prepossessing—that is, as far as clothes were concerned. For he wore a rusty velveteen jacket, and as the days passed he sat for the most part back in the garden smoking an old briar pipe. At meal times he responded laconically to the civil engineer's conversation, and had smiles for no one but Sallie. When quaint little Sallie entered the room Michael Dawn's fine eyes would light with welcome. He liked to sit, too upon the back porch with Sallie, helping in peeling the peaches or joining in her whistled conversation with the robin.

His fine eyes would grow luminous and he would murmur again his new name for her, "Little Golden Heart." And though Michael Dawn was also "queer" Sallie's trust and admiration were unfailing. There were days when he would absent himself from the home, with neither excuse nor apology. When he came back at twilight he would tell Sallie that he had been "very busy." And Sallie, wondering, would yet nod and smile without question.

The summer was hot and Sallie grew pale with her tireless labor. These peaceful evenings in the companionship of Michael had come to be her relaxation and exceeding joy.

"Why," he asked her impatiently, "do you not ask your sister to help you?"

"She wouldn't know how," Sallie gave ingenuous reply. "We were born different. Phyllis is a golden butterfly, made to hover over flowers. I'm that busy little ant—happiest in the building of my home."

One day Phyllis came grudgingly. "You will have to attend the big club reception, Sallie," she said, "or people will talk. Couldn't you fix over my old white dress for yourself? John Stewart, the author, is to be there; everyone is crazy to meet him. His books are very popular, you know; he's a student of types."

Sallie hated to go. She confided her trepidation to Michael Dawn.

"Don't you be afraid," he consoled her; "I'll be there and I will talk to you."

So Sallie went. The brilliantly lighted rooms, the scent of many flowers, the people all crowding around one man's tall figure confused her. Then the man, turning, was but Michael Dawn after all. Directly he came and tucked Sallie's hand beneath his arm.

"Don't be frightened, Sallie," he said, "I am John Stewart; that's my pen name. Phyllis, all of them are surprised; they'll be more surprised when they read my new book, 'Little Golden Heart.' They will appreciate you then when you are far away."

Tenderly Michael Dawn smiled into Sallie's upraised, wondering eyes. "For you'll be traveling far with your book-writing husband, Golden Heart," he said; "he needs you—his joy and inspiration."

BRITISH LABOR HEADS DEMAND ACTION AGAINST THE PROFITEERS

LONDON, Aug. 9.—British labor leaders today were demanding direct action against profiteers, immediate relief from the high prices and guarantee that on advances would be permitted in the future.

"I'd string up all persons who would take advantage of the sacrifices in blood made by the Country," J. H. Thomas Laborite, M. P., declared.

Jack Jones, another M. P., urged establishment of municipal markets as remedy and hanging as a penalty for offenders.

Limit profits to a pre-war basis suggested J B. Clynes, former controller; while Benjamin Speer, a member of parliament favored nationalized or essential industries.

Honor Noted Missionary.

Among the relics preserved on the island of Tahiti is the burial place of Rev. Henry Nott, one of the first, and considered the greatest, of the missionaries who went to the South Seas in the early days. The mission sent out from England to Tahiti in 1796 was the first undertaken by the London Missionary society after its formation. Henry Nott was of this company who landed from the ship Duff, commanded by Capt. James Wilson, at Matavai bay, Tahiti, in 1797. From that time until his death in 1844 he labored without ceasing in the island. It was he who first translated the Scriptures, directly from the original Hebrew and Greek texts, into the Tahitian language.

Love.

Love, amid the other graces in the world, is like a cathedral tower, which begins on the earth, and at first is surrounded by the other parts of the structure. But at length, rising above buttressed walls and arch and parapet and pinnacle, it shoots spirelike many a foot right into the air—so high that the huge cross on its summit grows like a speck in the morning light and shines like a star in the evening sky, when the rest of the pile is enveloped in darkness. So love, here, is surrounded by the other graces, and divides the honors with them; but they will have felt the wrap of night and of darkness, where it will shine luminous against the sky of eternity.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Care of Umbrellas.

Carelessness in the treatment of umbrellas is a great factor in their rapid deterioration. An umbrella merely damp should be opened and left until dry, while a very wet one should be put to drain first, handle downward, and opened for the final drying.

SPLENDID PROGRAM READY FOR CHAUTAUQUA GOERS

Everybody will want to attend the Coshocton chautauqua held in the big Coit-Alber chautauqua tent August 14-20 inclusive, during which time a great seven day program fully up to the standards established by the Coit-Alber organization, will be given.

If you buy a season ticket it will cost you $2.20. The 20 cents goes to Uncle Sam for war tax. If you were to attend all of the numbers and pay the single admissions charged including the federal war tax each time, you would need to pay out $6.85. Here is an opportunity to save $4.65 by buying a season ticket.

Season tickets are transferable within the owner's family, so if it is impossible for a person to attend every session he can have some other member of the family use the ticket at such sessions.

No greater value has ever been offered by the Coshocton chautauqua to a season ticket purchaser. One attraction alone, the Percival Vivian Company, presenting George M. Cohan's greatest comedy success, "Seven Keys to Baldpate," is a $2 attraction if seen in any of our theaters. Furthermore, it is doubtful if you would see as good a company, for every member of this company has played in important plays during the past winter in our big cities. Percival Vivian who plays the leading role, was one of the three principal players in the great New York success "The Better Ole."

There are a half dozen other attractions on the great program to hear any one of which would cost almost the price of a season ticket. Furthermore, the buying of a season ticket helps the local committee in charge of the chautauqua.

Who and What Are the Reasons?

Who opposes the proposed form of government being presented to the voters at the Nov. election and what are the reasons? The same class that opposed charters in other cities in Ohio and for the same reason.

No one understands better than the professional politician that charter government for cities interferes seriously with the red tape and the graft and the inefficiency and the irresponsibility and the extravagance of the old and present way. If it did not but merely made things worse, instead of better, as these professionals argue it will, then they would all be for the change. Who would deny that there is great waste, improvidence, loose management, divided responsibility and opportunity for civic corruption under our present form of government. It should be the aim of every municipality to take advantage of every thing it can, to make it easy to fix responsibility, to discourage waste and extravagance and to help its public officials to do the right thing under all circumstances. Not one city in Ohio that has tried the charter form of government, ever went back to the old form as Coshocton has now. It will be a selfish citizen that on next Tuesday will vote no, or who will not be willing that fifteen of our own citizens be permitted to draft a charter and present the same for the voters' approval or rejection at the Nov. election. The manifestly fair thing to do on next Tuesday is to give these men a chance to prepare a charter which every loyal Coshoctonian can enthusiastically endorse and support.

CHARTER COMMISSION.
